Starbucks’ digital tip jar set to go online

Associated Press
Published 5:28 pm, Wednesday, March 12, 2014

Most Read

1. Father bit off baby’s nose over crying, Fairfield police say
2. Woman kidnapped, robbed, ransomed in San Jose while trying to make Craigslist buy
3. Latest Fox comedy 'Arrested Development' is so funny it’s doomed
4. South By Southwest goes on after crash kills 2
5. Homecoming on horizon? WR Edelman to
Starbucks customers, like these in New York, can leave tips through the chain's app starting next week. Photo: Ron Antonelli, Bloomberg

New York --

Starbucks will soon let customers leave tips with its mobile payment app, which raises the question - how often do people tip their baristas?

The coffee chain says the mobile tipping option, which it announced more than a year ago, will be available on its updated app for iPhones starting next Wednesday. The rollout comes as the company’s app has gained popularity, with roughly 1 out of every 10 purchases now made with a mobile device.

After paying with the app, Starbucks says, customers will be able to leave a tip of 50 cents, $1 or $2 anytime within two hours of the transaction. The tipping option will be available only at company-owned stores - 7,000 of the roughly 11,000 Starbucks locations in the United States.

The move puts a spotlight on what can be a sensitive topic for customers, workers and even Starbucks, which has faced lawsuits over how it divvies up the contents of tip jars among workers. Some customers are happy to tip for friendly service, knowing that baristas don't earn that much. Others say they already fork over enough money and shouldn't be made to feel like they should throw money into a tip jar as well.

Zee Lemke, who has worked as a Starbucks barista in Wisconsin for more than three years, said most customers nevertheless leave a tip of some sort. She said tips generally add between $1.50 and $2 to her hourly pay of $9.05. But she noted that there's no rule on how much baristas can expect to earn from tips.

"It varies a lot from store to store, even in the same city," Lemke said. At the drive-through location where she works, for instance, she said tips go down when it's cold and people are less likely to reach out and put money in the secured tip box that hangs off a ledge.

Lemke, 30, said mobile tipping has the potential to boost the amount she earns. Still, she doesn't like the idea of employers relying on tips to compensate workers.

"It's a way of claiming workers make more than you're paying them," she said.

Starbucks, meanwhile, has been pushing to get people to sign up for its mobile app and rewards program, which helps increase the likelihood that people will visit its stores. The company says the addition of the mobile tipping option is a response to demand from customers, many of whom no longer carry around much cash.

"We asked our customers what they thought would be easiest and best," said Adam Brotman, chief digital officer for Starbucks. There are no plans to bring the mobile tipping option to stores licensed to other operators, however.

Exactly how Starbucks divides up the tip jars varies. Shannon Liss Riordan, an attorney who represented baristas in lawsuits saying shift supervisors shouldn't share in tips, said the cash is typically distributed on a weekly basis.

"They keep it in a safe and dole it out to employees ... based on the number of hours worked," she said.

As for the tips earned through mobile payments, Starbucks said they’ll be paid out to workers in cash in line with however they receive their regular tips.
From Around the Web

- 4 ways to become financially savvy (Better Money Habits ™)
- The Five Big Lies of Retirement Planning (Charles Schwab)
- A gasoline tax map that explains a lot (ExxonMobil Perspectives Blog)
- The Must-Have Membership for Every Entrepreneur (WSJ)
- How Can Small Businesses Get Funding? (Fundera)
- Four Reasons Salespeople Lose the Deal (Hoovers)

We Recommend

- Arrest made after S.F. manhunt for shooter (SFGate)
- UC board to consider making Cloyne Court drug-free (SFGate)
- Mandalay Bay agrees to $500K fine in drug sting (SFGate News)
- Google Glass video game 'Global Food Fight' ready for release (SFGate News)
- Emergency water supply used to fight San Francisco fire (SFGate)
- 2012 fire leaves eyesore near West Oakland BART Station (SFGate)
Starbucks' digital tip jar set to go online - SFGate

3/14/2014

Inside SFGate

3-wheeler answer to urban traffic woes?

Pick your cute: Lion babies or polar cubs?

Kanishka’s Neo-Indian Gastropub delicious

Fiore: Uganda and the Miracle of Denial

Displaying 1-4 of 12

Home  News  Sports  Business  Entertainment  Food  Living  Travel  Shopping  Find Bay Area Jobs  Real Estate  Cars  Site Index

Company Info:  Contact Us  SFGate staff  Hearst  Privacy Policy  Your California Privacy Rights  Terms & Conditions  Work for Us  Chron in Education  Events & Promotions  Submissions

Advertising Services:  Advertise with us  Place a Classified  About Our Ads  Public Notices  Local Businesses: Business Directory

Reader Services:  Subscribe Now  Manage Your Subscription  iPad  E-Edition  Mobile Site  RSS  Newsletters  Feedback  FAQ  Corrections  Get Us

© 2014 Hearst Communications, Inc.

HEARST newspapers